Lisa Marie Albert, MS, MPH is a Research Associate at FHI 360. Her global health research interests include using documentary photography to build awareness of health issues and increase human rights advocacy. Lisa graduated magna cum laude from UNC Wilmington in 2000 with her BS in Applied Mathematics, and completed an MS in Biomathematics at NCSU in 2006. After travels to several developing countries, Lisa decided to focus her career on global health. During her MPH program at UNC, she held a UNC fellowship at FHI where she worked on a community-based HIV prevention research project in Durham, NC. After completing her MPH in 2010, she lived in Uganda where she worked with a joint livelihood and HIV prevention program. While in Uganda she also worked with homeless street children using photovoice methods to produce a child rights advocacy campaign. Understanding the value of evidence-based data alongside visual and individual stories, Lisa aims to marry these seemingly separate perspectives in HIV prevention research.
