A delegation of nursing professionals traveled to Vietnam this fall in November with People to People Citizen Ambassador Programs. People to People Citizen Ambassador Programs arranges substantive professional exchanges. As a delegation member, I had an opportunity to share my health care expertise and discuss new approaches and ideas about health care delivery and nursing with my counterparts throughout Vietnam. This delegation’s itinerary allowed us to collaborate with respected leaders in Vietnam, to investigate the health care system, public health, practice and education of nurses in Vietnam, and the health care issues in rural Vietnam. Our delegation made a total of five professional visits in Vietnam, at four hospitals and one school of medicine and nursing. At the School of Medicine in Ho Chi Ming City, I presented my current program of research focusing on teaching nurse practitioner and social work students delivery of difficult health news to those with serious illness. This presentation will focus on health care trends and nursing care services in Vietnam, in both the public and private sectors.
