

The Feminist Teaching Award

This award recognizes UNCW faculty for excellence in teaching.

This award is created as an annually funded award at the University of North Carolina Wilmington to honor excellence in feminist pedagogy, which values participatory, equitable, and inclusive classroom communities, works to create an atmosphere where students can find their own voices and become empowered, and is committed to reflective practices and intersectional social justice and equity for marginalized peoples.

The award is a merit award and the recipient will be selected on a written nomination. It will be awarded annually to one continuing full-time or part-time faculty member with 2 or more continuous years in good standing at UNCW. The recipient receives an award and $300.

The Kathleen Berkeley Inconvenient Woman Award

This annual award at the University of North Carolina Wilmington was established in recognition of Dr. Berkeley's work as a courageous advocate for marginalized members of the UNCW community.

The award recognizes the actions of a faculty or staff member of the UNCW family for her or his activism on the behalf of others. It acknowledges either a persistent pattern of taking risks on issues of social justice and gender equality, or an active cause-specific commitment. The recipient will have challenged the status quo in an attempt to improve our university community. Importantly, the award cherishes the act of vulnerability in making oneself inconvenient to the powers that be while in service to others.
